THE LITTLE WHITE ANGEL. he door of the village school house, one

b vely summer evening. They were all talking pleasantly together, from Kline, the son of the rich and proud Hoffmeister, to little blue eyed ter Friedrich. Carl, the only child of the poor baker.

It is very true that Kline worne a velvet jacket, richly embroidered, while Carl's coat was old, and his wooden shoes were rough enough, in all conscience. But what of that? If they were good friends, what difference did that make, I should like to know? Wait till children become people, for pity's sake, before you them to measure each other's and away they all summered, laughing door opened, and Master Friedrich himself appeared, and cried in a cheery,

"Welcome, my children!"

"Welcome, master!" cried they. And now they entered and took their seats, and were quite still while the good master read a short chapter in the Book of Books; and then reverently kneeling, prayed that the dear Savior would guide them in his teachings, and bless them, and send His holy spirit to watch over

School began; the thumb worn books were brought out; the lazy leys began to sigh and frown, and wish impatiently for the recess, and wonder why Latin dictionaries were ever invented; when, as if by magic, they found themselves listening to the pleasent voice of Master Friedrich, tions; and the time for recess came, to their great astonishment, long before they had expected. When the studies were over, the master drew from his desk a box, and whilst the children gathered around he opened it, and drew out charming little white and pink sea shell, pretty pictures, and many other brantiful things which he gave to the children, with love-

"Oh, the dear angel, the beautiful an gell" cried they all. "Wilt thou not g ve it to me, Master Friedriga?"

But the good master smiled and said: "The little angel is too lovely to be givof heart. We shall presently see who shall deserve her. He who brings me to mother, dear master, says that God's morrow the brightest thing on earth precious Testament is far beyond all shall deserve her. He who brings me toshall have the angel."

At this the children looked at each other, as if wonderig what the good master might mean. - But he said no more, and they went home thoughtfully.

The next day, after the lessons (which had now become so plea-ant) were finish ed, the clildren clustered around the master, to show him what they had brought. Some of the smaller ones had picked they must be something bright and precious.
